

Recovery.Seattle.Gov website (5/24/10)

Background

- Seattle has received nearly $107 million in federal stimulus awards to date.
- When the Recovery Act was passed, it included unprecedented requirements for accountability and transparency on how all the funds will be used.
- Looked at other jurisdictions' recovery websites to create vision of how Seattle's tracking website should look and function.
- The City has a decentralized grants process, which has presented a major challenge in pulling all the info together into one central location to allow the public to easily track City's ARRA awards and projects. The important lessons learned from this process can serve as a model for tracking and monitoring other applications in the future.

Deliverables

- Work on the new website began in January 2010 – staffed by the Dept of Finance & Administrative Services (FAS) and Mayor's Office.
- New website is a .NET web application developed by the Business Technology & Applications Division in FAS. It leverages products from Microsoft and Telerik, Inc to access the most current data from its internal systems in order to produce timely and relevant ARRA information for the public.
- New stimulus website can be accessed via <http://recovery.seattle.gov>.
